FRANCKVOGEL

PHOTOJOURNALIST

Franck Vogel works as a freelance photojournalist on social and environmental issues for the international press (Paris Match, GEO, Stern, Le Monde diplomatique, NRC Weekblad, Animan, VSD, Discovery).

Since 2007, he has focused on the unique relationship between Man & Nature in an effort to illustrate that it's possible to live in harmony. In a world where most global reports represent the worst, Franck decided to bring hope. As an example, his epic work about the Bishnoi community in India tells the story of some of the world's first environmentalists. This work has been published all over the globe, including in GEO magazine's special 30th anniversary issue in 2009, as well as photos showcased in Parisian Metro stations in 2011 and 2012 (12 million visitors). In order to reach a wider audience, Franck Vogel wrote and co-directed a documentary film entitled, « Rajasthan, l'âme d'un prophète » (The Bishnois, India's Eco-Warriors), which was broadcast June 11th, 2011 on France 5 TV. The film was awarded the Phoenix d'Or 2011 and the 2013 Terre Sauvage Award.

His recent work to denounce the Albino killings in Tanzania has been featured in magazines and exhibited around the world (Rencontres d'Arles, Visa pour l'Image, Pingyao Photo Festival in China...), and Michel Lafon Publishing released his book on Albinos in 2012. His latest book « Zeru, Zeru » is available on blurb.com

Franck Vogel is currently focusing on global transboundary water tensions and has completed stories on the Nile and Brahmaputra, for the Saint-Brieuc Photoreporter Festival (France) in 2012 and 2014. Stories were subsequently published by GEO, Stern and Le Monde Diplomatique.

On October 4th, 2013, to reward his tireless efforts to promote the Bishnoi culture, Franck Vogel received highest honors from Bishnoi religious and political leaders at a ceremony at the Mukam Festival (India) attended by thousands of pilgrims.

Since 2011, Franck has been an ambassador for Green Cross, Mikhail Gorbachev's NGO for the environment.
